Dear Leon:

I have your letter of 17 December 1950, relative to the experiences of German scientists in the Soviet Union.

After a thorough search by my people here in Washington, I am advised that there is no unclassified information which can be made available regarding the activities of German scientists in the USSR which would confirm or deny the information given you by these two men. I regret that we can not be of any assistance to you in this matter.

With best wishes for a successful New Year.

Sincerely,

W. B. Smith

Lieut. General Walter Bedell Smith, Director,
Central Intelligence Agency,
Washington, D. C.

Dear General:

I am engaged in preparing an article about new methods of warfare being tested in the Soviet Union -- especially bacteriological warfare, and the planting of bubonic plague bacilli on migratory birds. My sources are the experiences of two German scientists who were forced to work on these experiments, but later escaped Russia to tell the story.

It would be very helpful to me if I could get confirmation of this material from a United States source. Would you be good enough to refer me to someone in Washington or New York, in CIA, or perhaps in Chemical Warfare, who might be acquainted with Russian experiments of this character?

I miss the opportunity to see you from time to time at Governor's Island, and hope our paths may cross again soon.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

/s/ Leon

MEMORANDUM TO: GENERAL SMITH

Mr. Leon Pearson, in the attached letter (Tab A), indicates that he is preparing an article on bacteriological warfare and that his sources are the experiences of two German scientists who were forced to work for the Soviets, but later escaped. Mr. Pearson has asked if we could get confirmation from U. S. sources that the Russians are "experimenting with bacteriological warfare".

I have been informed by Dr. Chadwell that he knows of no unclassified sources which could be furnished Mr. Pearson.
